COMMUNITY SCIENCE AT SMOKEY HOUSE CENTER:

Community science is a form of research in which community members contribute directly to scientific inquiry. It shifts traditional boundaries between researchers and the public, creating meaningful opportunities for people to participate in data collection, monitoring, and ecological observation. At Smokey House, community science serves as an accessible entry point to our research efforts, allowing volunteers, students, and visitors to participate in monitoring phenology, forest health, wildlife activity, soil and water conditions, and other place-based ecological processes.
